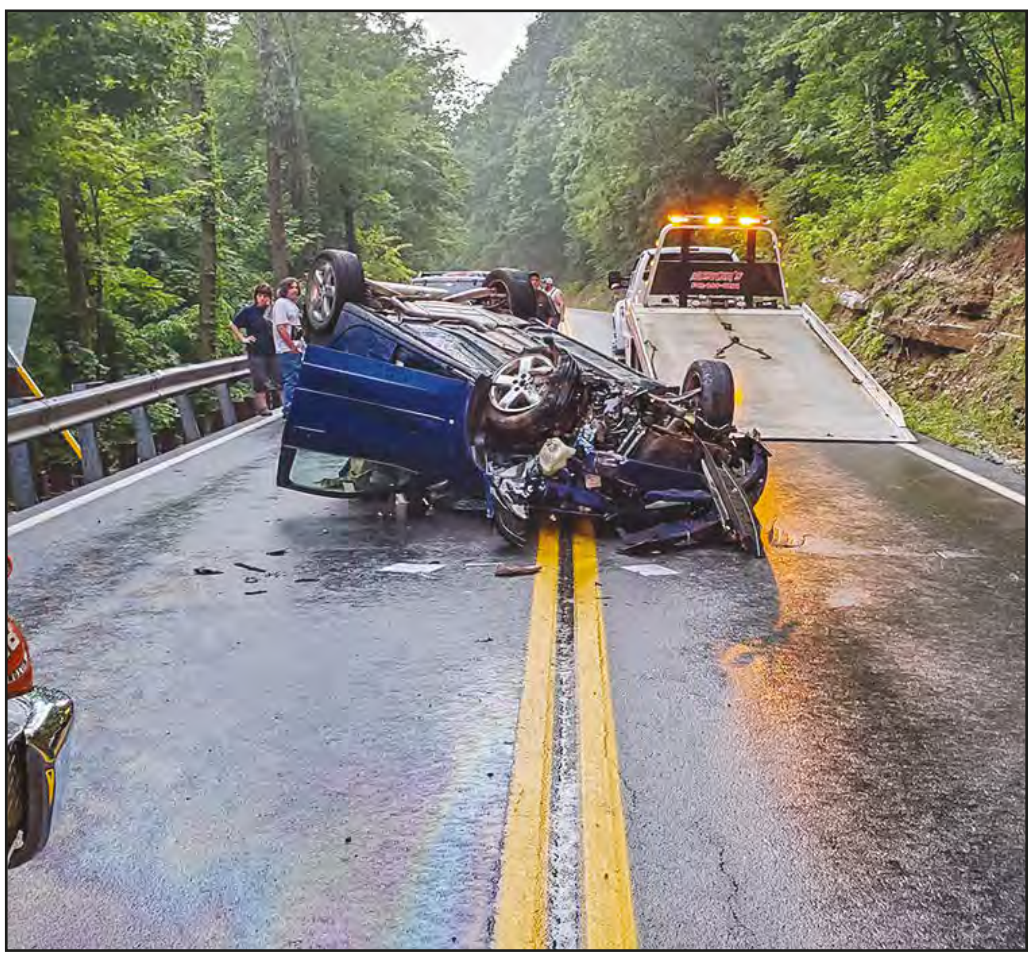
Forecast for more downpours

Weekend leaves imprint in downed trees, auto accidents



Heavy rainfall and volatile weather over the weekend made for some treacherous driving on Courierarea roadways. An SUV hydroplaned on water, went off the roadway in the 1600 block of Clifty Drive (top left) and sideswiped a sign post while missing a head-on impact with both the post and a nearby utility pole in front of Nu-Yale Cleaners. A motorist slipped on water, struck a culvert and overturned on US 421 near the top of Milton Hill (top right). A service van (above) drives under an arch formed by a damaged locust tree that split during high wind in the 1400 block of Terrace Drive on Madison's hilltop. Heaviest flooding hit just north of this area

Editor's Note: The National Weather Service forecast early Monday afternoon for the Madison area called for more heavy rain with similar weather patterns continuing throughout the week, increasing the possibility of localized flooding as already saturated soil is soaked with more precipitation. All local counties remained under a flash flood watch until 2 p.m. Tuesday, June 18.

By MARK CAMPBELL
Courier staff writer

Heavy rainfall and some high wind made for a volatile weekend in the Courierarea, but local residents felt far less impact from the massive storm than communities just to the north where several inches of rain fell.

The heavy rain resulted in flash flooding that closed several roads in Ripley, Jennings, Bartholomew, Decatur, Rush and Monroe counties, including swamping Interstate 65 near Seymour and closing the small town of Friendship.

All four lanes of I-65 were under water Sunday near the Seymour exit and high water closed down the town of Friendship where the National Muzzle Loading Rifle Association spring championships were wrapping up as the rain-swollen Laughery Creek overflowed its banks and cut off SR 62.

According to Troy Morgan, director of the Jefferson County Emergency Management Services, the brunt of the storm hit north of the local area but local officials still are monitoring what effect that deluge may have here. In addition to monitoring the Ohio River, Morgan said local EMS is also watching the Muscatatuck River near Deputy because flood waters could pose a threat to roads and residences there.

Morgan said there was plenty of rainfall locally but nothing like in counties to the north.

"North of us they got a lot more rain and more severe storms," Morgan said. "The rain was much more severe in Decatur and Bartholomew counties ... I'm not near as worried about the (local impact from the) rain up there as I am the Ohio River and I'm not worried about it right now."

Morgan's assessment was echoed by

2-vehicle 421 crash in Ripley County kills Madison man

By MARK CAMPBELL
Courier staff writer

An Indiana State Police investigation into a fatal U.S. 421 crash Friday is considering "improper passing" and "high rate of speed" as possible "contributing factors" in the collision.

The crash, which took place about 3:30 p.m. Friday, June 14 on U.S. 421 just south of CR 1050 South in Ripley County, resulted in the death of Henry Martin Finney, 21, of Madison. Shannon Hubbard, 50, of Pekin, also sustained injuries in the collision.

Trooper Andrew Garrett arrived to find a charcoal 2016 Kia Soul and a black 2019 Mitsubishi Mirage in the east ditch of U.S. 421. The preliminary investigation by Garrett "shows that the Kia Soul was traveling southbound and was "attempting to pass another vehicle" while a Mitsubishi Mirage was traveling northbound and "could not avoid a collision" with the Kia, which was in the northbound lane.

Hubbard, the driver of the Kia, was taken to King's Daughters' Hospital in Madison and then flown to University of Cincinnati Hospital by the lifeline helicopter in "serious but stable" condition. Finney, the driver of the Mitsubishi was taken to King's Daughters' Hospital where he died about 5:45 p.m.

Finney was knocked unconscious in the collision and had to be removed from the wreckage of his car. Witnesses said Hubbard did not lose consciousness. An air ambulance was dispatched to the scene and waited in the field nearby but both drivers were taken by ambulance.

"It is believed that both drivers were wearing their seatbelts. Drugs and or alcohol are not believed to be a contributing factor to the crash. Improper passing and traveling at a high rate of speed are believed to be contributing factors to the crash," said a report issued by ISP.

The investigation is ongoing and toxicology results are pending.

Both lanes of U.S. 421 were stopped for about an hour until emergency crews could clear the injured from the wreckage.

Traffic was backed up for about a mile in both directions while many other vehicles opted to turn around and take detours around the site.

Trooper Garrett was assisted at the scene by the Ripley County Sheriff's Department, Jefferson County Sheriff's Department, Ripley County EMS, King's Daughters' Hospital EMS, Versailles Fire Department and Affordable Todd's Wrecker Service.

Finney, a 2016 graduate of Madison Consolidated High School, was a crew member at McDonald's of Madison and was learning to become a manager.

He was also a longtime volunteer at the The Waters of Clifty Falls in Madison.

Buttigieg returns to South Bend after man killed by police

Indiana

INDIANAPOLIS — A police officer fatally shot a black man in South Bend, leading mayor Pete Buttigieg to return home early from a presidential campaign trip to address the public and reach out to community members. The shooting happened early Sunday after someone called police to report a suspicious person going through cars, the St. Joseph County prosecutor's office said. A police officer confronted a man in a vehicle at an apartment building parking lot. The man exited the vehicle and approached the officer with a knife raised and the officer opened fire, it said. Authorities didn't release the name or race of the officer. The man, 53-year-old Eric Jack Logan of South Bend, later died at a hospital. An autopsy was scheduled for Monday. Buttigieg, who is part of a crowded field seeking the Democratic nomination to run for president next year, cut short a campaign trip to New York to return to South Bend, where he will complete his second term as mayor this year. At a news conference late Sunday, he said the circumstance of the shooting would be thoroughly investigated and he called on anyone who may have witnessed the shooting to come forward and to speak to investigators. Buttigieg has had a sometimes tense relationship with the black community dating back to his first term in office, when he fired the city's first black police chief. He has also faced criticism for his handling of other police-involved shootings. He said Sunday that he was sometimes hesitant to speak publicly after police-involved shootings earlier in his time as mayor, and that he heard from the black community that he needed to be more open and transparent. He said he planned to meet Monday with faith and community leaders.

Purdue tuition frozen through 2020-21

WEST LAFAYETTE — Purdue University will freeze tuition for Indiana residents on its West Lafayette main campus for the seventh and eighth consecutive years, through the 2020-21 academic year. The Purdue trustees on Friday approved the tuition and fee schedule for the 2020 and 2021 fiscal years and the university's operating budget for the 2020 fiscal year. Base undergraduate tuition and fees for Indiana residents on the main campus will remain under $10,000 per year. With the exception of flight program fees, all general fees also will remain flat. Purdue says tuition and fees at its Northwest and Fort Wayne campuses will follow the Indiana Commission for Higher Education's recommended increase of up to 1.65 percent each year of the biennium.

Indiana opioid scripts fall by 35% since 2013

INDIANAPOLIS — A national report says opioid prescriptions in Indiana have decreased by 35.1 percent over five years. The American Medical Association Opioid Task Force 2019 Progress Report shows Indiana's reduction in opioid prescriptions from 2013 to 2018 is two percentage points higher than the national average of 33 percent. Indiana Hospital Association President Brian Tabor said last week the opioid epidemic has damaged "individuals, families and entire communities" in Indiana. "It's encouraging to see tangible results of the collective efforts of the state, the Indiana General Assembly and the medical community" in encouraging responsible prescriptions of opioids, he said. A 2017 law passed by the Indiana General Assembly requires medical providers to write prescriptions for no more than a seven-day supply of an opioid when first prescribing to a patient.

Hospital museum for sale in Wolf Lake

WOLF LAKE — The owner of a small town's former hospital that's become a medical museum is looking for someone to take it over. The Luckey Hospital Museum building in the Noble County community of Wolf Lake dates to 1931 when it was opened as a hospital by Dr. James Luckey. After closing in the 1950s the building was used as a nursing home and apartments before two great-nieces bought it in 2000 and started displaying their collection of medical memorabilia. Eighty-three-year-old Shirley Hile told The (Kendallville) News Sun that she can't keep up the museum anymore since her sister died a year ago. Hile hopes a buyer will keep the museum intact. A museum anniversary celebration is planned for July 13.

Ports awarded Green Marine designation

BURNS HARBOR — The Ports of Indiana have become the nation's first inland waterway system to secure a national designation that honors the adoption of environmental best practices. The (Northwest Indiana) Times reported the Green Marine certification awarded to Indiana's three-port system recognizes the shipping industry's environmental sustainability in storm water management, spill prevention and other measures. Indiana's Lake Michigan port at Burns Harbor earned the honor in 2014 for going beyond regulatory requirements in areas like aquatic invasive species and air pollutants. But now Indiana's two Ohio River ports at Mount Vernon and Jeffersonville have received the Green Marine distinction, securing that voluntary environmental certification for the entire Indianapolis-based ports system. That makes Indiana the first statewide port authority in the nation to earn a Green Marine certification for environmental sustainability.

Probe disputes Indy mayor's housing claims

INDIANAPOLIS — A newspaper investigation has found inconsistencies with Indianapolis Mayor Joe Hogsett's claims of transforming more than 2,500 blighted homes. Since 2017, Hogsett has pledged to "rehab, transform or demolish" 2,000 homes within two years. His office has touted the initiative as a way to fight crime, among other things. But the Indianapolis Star reported the mayor's count is inflated with new luxury apartments and existing homes that received minor repairs and remain uninhabitable. For example, one house in Hogsett's count still has boarded up windows and doors and is laden with graffiti. Hogsett acknowledged his description of the program doesn't match what it has accomplished. But he said the program wasn't envisioned solely as a public-safety program. He argues that his administration has still improved housing stock and neighborhoods.

Tax credit change may lure investors

INDIANAPOLIS — A change that lawmakers made this spring to a tax incentive for startups is being hailed as a big win for the tech industry because it promises to make it easier for fledgling businesses to attract out-of-state investors. Legislation signed by Gov. Eric Holcomb will allow investors to transfer Indiana's Venture Capital Investment tax credits starting next year. Transferring the credits will allow out-of-state investors to essentially sell them to someone in the state who can take advantage, the Indianapolis Business Journal reported. Many tech community leaders believe the change will encourage out-of-state investment in Indiana startups. "It's certainly not the only driver when making the decision about whether to invest in a company," said Mike Simmons, executive chairman and president of Sharpen Technologies. "But it certainly makes it a much easier decision." The state's VCI tax credit program allows an individual who invests in an Indiana startup to claim a tax credit worth 20 percent of the investment. Someone investing $500,000 in an eligible startup can receive a $100,000 cut in income taxes owed to the state. The credit is capped at $1 million. Startups eligible for the program have to register with the Indiana Economic Development Corporation and set a venture capital fundraising goal. Investors can receive the 20 percent credit until the company reaches its target, which is capped at $5 million. The development group can only award $12.5 million in tax credits each year. The total credits haven't yet reached the cap.

Man offered money to 'rape and murder'

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — An Indiana man implicated in the murder of an Alaska teenager had allegedly promised millions of dollars to the teens who killed her in exchange for images of the killing, the Anchorage Daily News reported Saturday. Court documents say that investigators believe Darin Schilmiller of New Salisbury, Indiana, posed as a millionaire named "Tyler" online and offered 18-year-old Denali Brehmer $9 million or more to "rape and murder someone in Alaska," the newspaper reported. Brehmer was supposed to send photos and videos of the killing back to Schilmiller, according to the court documents. Brehmer is charged with first-degree murder in the death of Cynthia "CeeCee" Hoffman. Hoffman was killed June 2 near a rural Anchorage trail. Police found her bound with duct tape in the Eklutna River near Thunderbird Falls. She had been shot in the back of the head. On Tuesday, federal prosecutors announced the arrest of Schilmiller on child pornography charges. He is charged with production of visual depiction of minors in sexually explicit conduct and attempted receipt of those depictions.

Illinois tax hikes may benefit Indiana

HAMMOND — Gasoline tax hikes in Illinois will likely send more drivers looking for better prices in Indiana, but it's unclear if a higher levy on cigarettes will have the same effect, industry analysts said. Starting July 1, the Illinois gas tax will double from 19 cents to 38 cents per gallon, compared to the 29 cents per gallon tax in Indiana. "The gas station convenience store industry in Illinois is on the endangered species list," William Fleischli, the executive vice president of the Illinois Petroleum Marketers Association/Illinois Association of Convenience Stores, told The (Northwest Indiana) Times. GasBuddy.com petroleum analyst Patrick DeHaan agreed. "Drivers that shop around will find easy savings by going into Indiana, and that will likely lead to a loss in gallon sales for Illinois," DeHaan said. Also next month, cigarettes will cost $1 more per pack in Illinois on top of the $1.98 tax per pack already in place. Elena Ivanova, of Chicago's health department, told the Associated Press that the tax on cigarettes in the city — already the highest in the nation — will increase to $8.16 per pack. By comparison, Indiana taxes every pack of cigarettes 95 cents. Gus Olympidis, the CEO of Family Express convenience stores, said that although Indiana's cigarette taxes are much lower, that cost advantage could be lost during the next legislative session when Indiana lawmakers could again consider raising cigarette taxes.

Armstrong's moonwalk 50th celebration set

WEST LAFAYETTE — Purdue University is planning several events commemorating the upcoming 50th anniversary of the Apollo 11 moon landing commanded by school alumnus Neil Armstrong. The university said events begin July 18 with a presentation on the landing by Apollo 11 flight director Gene Kranz, followed by a July 20 screening of "Armstrong," a new documentary film featuring home videos shot by Armstrong and unseen footage from NASA. Purdue will host a special exhibition of items from its Armstrong archives on July 19-20. Other July 20 events include children's activities on the Purdue Mall and a lunar module landing celebration timed around the 4:17 p.m. touchdown ahead of Armstrong becoming the first person to walk on the moon.

Armstrong was a 1955 Purdue graduate. He died in 2012 at age 82.

Evansville University settles professor suit

EVANSVILLE — The University of Evansville has reached a settlement in a federal lawsuit accusing a former theater professor of sexually harassing a student. Former university student Alexis Seay filed the lawsuit last year, accusing R. Scott Lank of racial and sexual harassment, including unwanted touching and comments. The tenured professor was subsequently fired by the school. An attorney representing Lank declined to comment on the settlement.

Indiana grass greener; just ask Colts, Bengals and Titans

By CHAD LINDSKOG
Evansville Courier & Press

PATOKA — A Colts fan, a Bengals fan and a Titans fan walk into a bar.

It's just a typical NFL Sunday in the Evansville area, save for the Bears contingent (and any loyal Rams fans left). Sure, this is Colts country, but it's conveniently about the same distance to Nashville and Cincinnati, too.

The Colts, Bengals and Titans appreciate their roots in Southwestern Indiana — literally.

GrassMasters Sod Farm, located in Gibson County, is in the process of harvesting Bermuda grass to cover football fields for all three franchises before the end of the month. It's working on the NFL's schedule because the sod needs to settle before training camp begins in late July.

"There's not another sod farm in the entire United States that provides sod for three different NFL teams," said Pam Bammer, who owns the farm with her husband, Joe. "It's a big deal for us."

By Wednesday evening, they harvested and transported 15 semi-truck loads to Paul Brown Stadium, where the sod was installed on the Bengals' practice fields. (A truckload is about 9,000 square feet of sod. There are roughly 25 rolls, which are 42 inches wide by 100 feet long.)

By the end of the day Friday, they'll have also sent the Titans 15 truckloads to cover the playing surface at Nissan Stadium.

The last week of June is reserved for the Colts, who buy GrassMasters' sod for their Indiana Farm Bureau Football Center practice fields.

"It's really neat," Pam Bammer said. "They're all really nice people. The expectations are much higher, of course, but they're extremely easy people to get along with. That's not always the case."

The Bengals were the first to come calling in 2014. The Colts followed in '16 and this is the first year the Titans contracted them.

GrassMasters has been operating on a family farm with about 350 acres in Patoka, Indiana, since 1997. In total, there are 25 workers during the busy summer months. The Bammers also are seeding a new farm in Colorado and have partnership farms in Lexington, Kentucky, as well as Panama.

Southern Indiana, however, exists in what farm manager Aaron Neufelder deems a "transitional belt." Bermuda grass is ideally grown in the south while fescue is northern, but GrassMasters is able to grow both here. Neufelder has been leading a crew working 12-hour days starting at 6 a.m.

In 2019, there will be 19 NFL stadiums with natural grass and 12 with artificial turf, including the Bengals and Colts. The Jets and Giants share a stadium with artificial turf and once the Rams and Chargers move into a new stadium in 2020, there will be roughly a 50/50 split between natural and artificial surfaces.

Lank had denied Seay's accusations in earlier court filings. The Evansville Courier & Press reports the proposed settlement has not yet been filed in court. A federal magistrate gave Seay's attorney 30 days from May 30 to file an order dismissing the lawsuit. The lawsuit included accusations that the school violated Title IX provisions barring gender discrimination in educational programs and activities receiving federal assistance.

Holcomb moves deputy to state budget director

INDIANAPOLIS — Indiana Gov. Eric Holcomb has a new budget aide. Holcomb announced Friday that Zachary Jackson will serve as state budget director after serving since 2013 as the deputy director, where he helped produce the governor's biennial budget and managed state spending. From 2008 to 2012, Jackson served as assistant director of the State Budget Agency, overseeing the Health and Human Services Division, where he managed more than 40 percent of the state's annual budget and provided fiscal oversight to about 35 state agencies. Jackson succeeds Jason Dudich as state budget director. Dudich resigned to become a vice president at the University of Indianapolis.

Kentucky

1 dead, 3 rescued after car swept away

TAYLORSVILLE — Authorities say a man died after a family's vehicle was swept away as they tried to cross a flooded bridge in Kentucky after heavy rains moved through the area. Spencer County Sheriff Scott Herndon told news outlets that emergency crews were called to the water rescue early Monday and found a woman and two children alive, but they weren't able to immediately locate the man. His body was found hours later. Herndon said the woman was found in the water holding onto a tree and the children were found downstream on a bank. He says it's a miracle they survived. Heavy rains moved over the area Sunday and the forecast called for more rain Monday. Herndon warned that people shouldn't try to cross a bridge or a road with water running over it.

Electric car chargers don't need regulation

FRANKFORT — The Kentucky Public Service Commission has ruled that electric car charging stations are not utilities and do not need to be subject to regulation. The ruling is intended to remove any ambiguity over the legal status of charging stations. The commission said it should also pave the way for more stations to be installed in Kentucky. The commission said Kentucky has lagged behind neighboring states in the availability of public charging stations. The state has 94. The ruling hinged on whether charging stations are providing electric service to the public, which would make them fall under the commission's jurisdiction. Commissioners determined that the stations are consumers and end users of electricity. The Public Service Commission regulates more than 1,100 gas, water, sewer, electric and telecommunication utilities operating in the state.

Supreme Court upholds man's conviction

ADAIRVILLE — The Kentucky Supreme Court has upheld a murder conviction and 55-year sentence for a man who killed his sister-in-law. The Bowling Green Daily News reported George Walker's sentence was upheld last week. The 24-year-old man was convicted last year of strangling 23-year-old Alice Walker in 2015 and tampering with physical evidence in her death. Alice Walker's body was found bound with rope, wrapped in a tarp and dumped in a river near her Adairville home. George Walker's appeal argued jurors saw a suppressed portion of his confession, which he argued shouldn't have been used as evidence because his rights were violated during it. The court dismissed these arguments, saying Walker's defense wasn't harmed by the video and his rights weren't violated.

Ex-auto plant worker indicted in mail fraud

GEORGETOWN — A federal grand jury has indicted a former Kentucky auto plant worker accused of stealing parts from the facility and selling them online, profiting more than $250,000. News outlets report the 14-count indictment came down Thursday for Randall Perry. Court documents state Perry took laser scanners and electronic components from his former job at the Toyota Motor Manufacturing plant in Georgetown. The indictment said Perry sold the parts on eBay between Nov. 2015 and Nov. 2017. If convicted, Perry would have to forfeit the more than $250,000 he's accused of obtaining in the scheme, and could be sentenced to up to 20 years in prison. Perry is scheduled to appear in federal court in July. It is unclear if he had a lawyer who could comment.

Owensboro man wants to stop town's violence

OWENSBORO — An Owensboro man is trying to bring residents together to stop the town's growing violence. The Owensboro Messenger-Inquirer reported that in a year that is not quite half over there have been five homicides within the city and two in the county, all gun-related. That's already one more homicide than the six for all of 2018. The most recent slaying occurred on Sunday, when 25-year-old Nicholas Decker was found at home with a gunshot wound shortly after midnight. Decker's friend Zachary Miller was one of those who showed up at a Thursday community meeting. "I feel like I owe it to him and all of the families that have lost someone in this recent violence," Miller said. "It seems like things have gotten worse. If there are more events like this, then it will remind people and bring them together for something positive." Others in attendance included religious leaders, members of law enforcement, parents, concerned community members, and those working with nonprofits that support youth. The meeting was organized by Tim Collier, who said the goal was to "win these streets back." He said the community needs to come together to help police fix the community's gun and drug problems.

RAISING TOBACCO-BUYING AGE

Senate raises age to buy; farmers deal with change

By MAX BLAU
Stateline • stateline.org

Burley tobacco once lined nearly every road in Shelby County, Kentucky. But when Paul Hornback drives through his hometown, the 62-year-old tobacco farmer rarely sees the leafy crop.

Despite his fears about tobacco farming, long the lifeblood of his community, Hornback supports the push to ban teenagers from buying cigarettes.

Last month, U.S. Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, a Kentucky Republican who co-sponsored a bill to raise the purchasing age limit for traditional and e-cigarettes from 18 to 21, said the changes were "not a zero-sum choice" between health and agriculture. Hornback, who serves as a Republican state lawmaker in Kentucky, agrees.

"I believe public health can win — and farmers can win," Hornback said. He thinks tobacco growers could diversify their crops, improving their long-term economic outlook, while seeing a potential improvement in teen health.

Faced with declining U.S. cigarette consumption, along with an increasingly competitive international market, tobacco farmers in states such as Kentucky, North Carolina and Virginia are bracing for the potential impact of a federal Tobacco 21, or "T-21," bill. Since the mid-2000s, more than a dozen states and nearly 500 cities have passed similar legislation. But it wasn't until the past year that T-21 gained traction in Southern states including Arkansas, Virginia and Texas.

Large tobacco companies, once opposed to raising the minimum tobacco-buying age, now support state and federal T-21 legislation. That about-face has worried some activists, who fear industry lobbying efforts behind such laws are intended to gut stronger local tobacco regulations.

Beyond the U.S. Capitol and statehouses, however, Southern farmers are left to figure out what comes next. Some tobacco farmers wary of T-21 think the legislation is the latest threat to one of the region's legacy crops. Others, like Hornback, voiced support for legislation designed to reduce teen smoking.

Tony Banks, a commodity-marketing specialist for the Virginia Farm Bureau, thinks it's only a matter of time before T-21 passes on a federal level. But as the country moves closer to that point, agricultural experts worry that the public health initiative could force farmers to grow less tobacco or push them out of the business.

"T-21 is probably inevitable," Banks said. "But it's another step in the direction of hastening declines in cigarette consumption. And it's another cut to [tobacco farmers'] production and income."

Tobacco farmers helped drive the economies of Southern states for centuries. Two kinds of tobacco — burley and flue-cured — fueled U.S. export markets well into the 1970s.

But growing awareness from Americans of smoking's link to cancer, along with the rise of international markets, sent domestic tobacco production in reverse.

Following the Tobacco Master Settlement Agreement, federal lawmakers passed a tobacco buyout as part of the Fair and Equitable Tobacco Reform Act in 2004.

It forced tobacco companies to pay billions of dollars to growers as part of the government's deregulation of the industry, and allowed some farmers to relinquish their tobacco production quotas.

The legislation was intended to help growers compete against international competitors. But China's tariffs on American tobacco have in part offset those gains.

Despite Southern tobacco farmers' economic presence across the region, they also have witnessed long-term health consequences. North Carolina, which produces more tobacco than any other state, ranks eighth in youth cigarette smoking rates. The second-highest tobacco producer, Kentucky, is nearly tied for the highest level of youth cigarette use.

Behind those states comes Virginia, which has lower smoking rates that mirror the national average, but has faced criticism from the American Lung Association for its inadequate policies for cessation funding and smoke-free air. (The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention does not have statewide data for 11 states.)

McConnell thinks his T-21 bill would help combat rising vaping rates among teens, while also addressing Kentucky's nation-leading cancer rates. That's a mission that tobacco farmers can rally behind — without feeling like they're left behind, he said.

"I haven't met a tobacco farmer yet who didn't think this was a good idea," McConnell said in a recent radio interview with WKYX. (His spokesperson did not make McConnell available for an interview with Stateline.) "Tobacco has been an important part of our culture. That doesn't mean that people who grow tobacco think youngsters ought to use."

While some public health advocates have aligned with Big Tobacco to advance hundreds of laws nationwide, other groups remain suspicious of those companies' intentions. A recent investigation from the Center for Public Integrity found that tobacco lobbyists have funded a "blitzkrieg" in which hundreds of lobbyists have sought to advance state-level bills.

U.S. Sen. Tim Kaine, a Virginia Democrat who co-sponsored the federal bill, thinks conservative tobacco farmers and progressive health activists can support T-21 to "keep tobacco products out of schools and away from our children." Virginia is home to one of the world's largest tobacco companies, Altria, the parent company of Philip Morris Companies.

William Paterson University economics professor Rahi Abouk said his research on local T-21 laws nationwide has found only limited reductions in smoking rates. But in a recent op-ed in the Courier Journal, McConnell further pitched Kentuckians on the idea of T-21.

"When it comes to tobacco, Kentuckians acknowledge our past and the role the historic crop still plays for a number of farmers today," McConnell wrote. "But we must also recognize the growing public health crisis of teenage vaping. Kentucky farmers don't want their children developing unhealthy addictions any more than any other parent."

Steve Pratt, the manager of a co-op with tobacco growers in five states, said he supports policies that keep kids away from cigarettes. But he doesn't share the same rosy outlook as McConnell or Hornback, in part because such legislation would lower tobacco demand.

"Obviously, anything that's going to cause people to stop smoking is going to cause a decline in demand for burley tobacco," Pratt said. "From that perspective, it's definitely not going to help the tobacco farming industry."

Blake Brown, an economics professor at North Carolina State University's cooperative extension, said T-21 marks the latest in a long line of threats that have chiseled into the once vibrant trade.

For decades, tobacco farmers have been hit by the confluence of a 3 percent annual drop in U.S. cigarette consumption and the rise of tobacco production in Brazil, China and Zimbabwe.

Most recently, President Donald Trump's trade war has pummeled North Carolina tobacco farmers who have temporarily lost business with some of their biggest clients.

If McConnell's bill is successful, "you'll have fewer young people start smoking," Brown said. "In the scheme of things — tariffs and other regulations — T-21 is fairly small. It might accelerate the trend of declined cigarette consumption."

In February, Kentucky tobacco farmer and Republican state Sen. Stan Humphries pushed back against Kentucky's state-level T-21 bill. During a Kentucky Senate Agriculture Committee hearing, a lawmaker proposed a bill that would have raised the smoking age to 21, arguing that Kentucky footed a $2 billion bill annually for tobacco-related sicknesses, and attendees offered a standing ovation.

But Humphries argued that the regulation posed a threat to the already-shrinking tobacco industry. The Republican-controlled committee voted against the bill. "Where I come from, tobacco is still king," Humphries said.

But since 2004, the year of the tobacco buyout, Pratt estimates the number of burley tobacco farmers in the states he represents — Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Missouri and West Virginia — has dropped from 175,000 to 3,000.

Last year, burley tobacco farmers planned to grow the fewest acres on record, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture. Because of that data, Pratt can't see a silver lining for additional regulations like T-21.

"That's not going to be a win-win for tobacco farmers," Pratt said.

As T-21 spreads across the country, many tobacco experts think it will further push tobacco farmers toward crop diversification.

Banks said Virginia tobacco farmers are growing more wheat, soybeans and industrial hemp. And farmers in eastern North Carolina have increasingly shifted toward a mix of sweet potatoes, hogs, poultry and tobacco. But Brown worries the move away from the profitable crop of tobacco means farmers will no longer have a strong safety net during harsher economic times.

"If nothing else was OK, tobacco would get them through it," Brown said. "In east North Carolina, farmers now don't talk about being a 'tobacco farmer.' They're a farmer — an astute businessman — who grows a diverse mix."

While Banks has concerns about the negative economic impact of Virginia's T-21 — in Virginia and beyond — he fears that it's a sign of things to come. Pending U.S. Food and Drug Administration proposals to lower addictive substances in cigarettes and smokeless tobacco products could create an "unfeasible" environment for tobacco growers, Banks said. Having spent nearly all his life in tobacco, Hornback has accepted the inevitable shift. Tobacco once made up 60 percent of his business. Now it accounts for 15 percent.

At this point, he doesn't just grow a larger variety of crops — he's even taken on construction work, too. Despite the constant threat to tobacco growers, Hornback thinks tobacco farming will survive, even if it's serving a niche market.

"Tobacco farmers have adapted and adjusted before," Hornback said. "But tobacco is not going away."

Why is Vanderburgh County's jail so overcrowded?

A perplexing issue is behind jail's crowded conditions

By JOHN T. MARTIN
Evansville Courier & Press

EVANSVILLE — The numbers are conclusive. The solutions, far less so.

Constructed in the early 2000s with 512 inmate beds, the Vanderburgh County Detention Center routinely has about 600 under roof, with another 200 or so taken to other area counties due to a lack of space.

The jail has always been crowded, but in the last few years, average daily population has spiked, and reliance on other county jails has continued to grow.

Vanderburgh County government is in throes of a long process leading to an expensive jail expansion.

There's not a solitary reason for the population surge.

Sheriff Dave Wedding, whose office runs the jail on Harlan Avenue, often points to the state's recent decision to have Level 6 felons (the lowest classification) serve sentences in county jails rather than with the Indiana Department of Correction.

Vanderburgh County routinely has about 150 such inmates housed. Examples include those serving time for theft, burglary, battery or multiple drunken driving arrests. It's common for an offender facing a higher felony charge to plead guilty to a Level 6 offense to settle a case.

The state's reimbursement for such inmates had been $35. In the last legislative session, it was raised to $37.50. The actual daily cost of housing an inmate is $55-$60.

Wedding, who is president of the Indiana Sheriffs' Association, has traveled the state raising awareness of the issue. Wedding said Southwestern Indiana lawmakers have toured the local jail and are aware of his plight, but elsewhere in the state, lawmakers aren't as concerned.

"It's an unfunded mandate," Wedding said. "They recently gave us an additional $2.50 (for daily reimbursement). It's like putting a Band-Aid over a gaping wound."

Another, more perplexing issue behind the jail's crowded conditions is the propensity of offenders to offend again.

Law enforcement officials said the jail is filled with inmates suspected or convicted of felonies — such as violent crimes and drug offenses — and in many instances, they are repeat guests.

Wedding keeps a list of some of the most egregious examples. A person who was recently arrested for dealing meth has had 13 arrests since 2011. Another has logged 35 arrests since 2003.

High jail population also is driven by individuals picked up for failing to make court dates or who violate conditions of their release. In those instances, Wedding said, there's no choice but to incarcerate the person.

Wedding disagreed that having more judges, courtrooms and staff for the prosecutor's and public defender's offices would significantly curb jail overcrowding.

"You could use a few more, but I don't think that's the problem," the sheriff said. "The problem is people aren't following conditions of their parole or probation or judge's orders. They can't follow simple rules."

Anyone picked up for drunken driving must be processed at the jail, to get them off the streets. But law enforcement officers disagreed that jail overcrowding is driven by penny-ante offenders.

A first-time arrest for something like marijuana possession or shoplifting an item from a department store is more likely to result in a citation rather than a jail trip, unless the offense is accompanied by something more serious.

Evansville Police Department Sgt. Jason Cullum said officers have discretion on misdemeanor-only cases, but anytime felonies are involved, a person is taken to jail.

"If there are options (to incarceration), and it frees officers up to address bigger issues, that's what they are going to do," Cullum said.

Vanderburgh County officials in recent meetings on the topic have discussed with their consultants what kind of facilities and services are needed in the jail expansion.

Consultants have said it will take 750 additional jail beds to adequately serve Vanderburgh County for the next 20 years.

The current jail cannot properly group inmates by their mental health needs.

Wedding said that's critical to getting inmates assistance they require to get their lives in order.

The most recent expansion design shown to county officials has the ability to separate those inmates from others in the facility. Wedding said in the past, he's proposed building an even larger mental health wing that would be available region-wide.

"I would like to build and design the addition based on the premise that we're going to work on inmates and try to slow them from reoffending," Wedding said. " ... If you want me to work on fixing them, it costs more money: Case managers, psychologists, mental health people. If you want me to warehouse them, it's not as much."

Wedding started working at the sheriff's office in 1981, and he said the number of people dealing with mental illness in jail custody has risen dramatically since that time.

"If you have a son or daughter and they were acutely mentally ill, wouldn't you be beside yourself if they were put in a concrete-and-steel box and that was their rehabilitation? If you put me in a box with no TV, no outside interaction, nothing to read, I would go nuts just sitting there. And now, you've got a person with a mental deficiency, and this is their treatment (in the jail currently)."

Vanderburgh Superior Court Judge Wayne Trockman said there is no question the jail must be expanded. But he said the justice system must continue to focus on treating nonviolent drug and alcohol offenders.

Some such programs already exist. Trockman started the county's treatment court program 18 years ago. More recently, he and Circuit Judge David Kiely decided the county's work-release program needed to be better utilized. The program was renamed Therapeutic Work Release, after being known as Community Corrections and the SAFE House in earlier years.

Such efforts have a good track record, Trockman said, and without them, the jail's overcrowding problem would be even worse than it is. The judge believes they can be utilized more, and he said fewer than one in five people in treatment court programs reoffend.

Trockman said the community also needs a "well-designed home detention program."

"There are other alternatives that need explored," Trockman said. "It doesn't mean we don't need a new jail, because we do. But there are other alternatives we can explore and use. These are alternatives to jail that lower recidivism, reduce crime and make our community a safer place, and it improves the quality of life in our community when individuals finish a program who have been committing crimes and are employed, are involved with their family and have pro-social relationships."

Vanderburgh County Prosecutor Nick Hermann said in a statement that when bargaining cases, non-jail alternatives are utilized "when applicable," but each criminal matter "presents unique circumstances."

"While the space issues with the Vanderburgh County Confinement Center are well documented, the Vanderburgh County Prosecutor's Office will continue to assess each criminal matter individually and determine the best course of action moving forward," Hermann said.

The Courier & Press left a message with the Vanderburgh County Public Defender's Office but did not receive a response.

Let Us Pause to Honor the Memory of

Mr. Henry Martin "Bubba" Finney

Mr. Henry Martin "Bubba" Finney, age 21, of Madison, Indiana entered this life on October 11, 1997 in Madison, Indiana. He was the loving son of Marty L. and Kimberly Annette Carlisle Finney. He resided all of his life in Madison and was a 2016 graduate of Madison Consolidated High School. He was baptized at the Commiskey Church of God and was a member of the Family Christian Youth Group there. He had worked the past four years at McDonald's of Madison as a crew member and was working to learn to be a manager. He had volunteered for several years at the Waters of Clifty Falls in Madison and made many friends with the residents there. Henry enjoyed scratch off tickets, playing and calling Bingo, going to Belterra and volunteering where ever needed. He was a loving son, nephew and cousin. Henry died on Friday, June 14, 2019, at 5:45 p.m. at the Emergency Room at King's Daughters' Hospital in Madison, Indiana from injuries sustained in a head on collision on Hwy 421 North.

A LOVING FAMILY

Henry will be missed by his loving mother, Kimberly Annette Carlisle Finney of Madison, Indiana; his maternal grandpa, Freddie Gorman Carlisle and his wife, Charlotte of Madison, Indiana; his brother, Daniel Finney of Kentucky; his aunts, Diane Carlisle Hamm of Madison, Indiana, Kathie Geist and her companion, Tom Boggs of Madison, Indiana, Pam Kohli and her husband, Wayne of Taberg, New York, Wanda Finney of Madison, Indiana; his uncles, Eddie Carlisle of Madison, Indiana, Dwight "Tex" Carlisle and his wife, Cindy of Madison, Indiana, James Lee Sublett of Madison, Indiana, Eddie Sublett of Buford, Georgia, Dale Sublett and his wife, Tammy of Elkhart, Indiana, Wayne and Clay Finney of Kentucky; his great aunts, Alma Mae Duncan of Madison, Indiana, Doris Jones and her husband, Larry of Madison, Indiana, Virginia Bear of Madison, Indiana; his great uncle, Walter Lanham of Madison, Indiana; his great aunt and great uncle, Inez and Hoke of Kentucky; numerous cousins and other relatives. He was preceded in death by his father, Marty L. Finney, died in 2008, his maternal grandmother, Ella Louise Ward Carlisle Sublett, died April 21, 2017, his step maternal grandpa, Donald Ray Sublett, died November 23, 1987, his paternal grandma, Anna Finney Hawkins, died 2002, his paternal grandpa, William Finney, died April 8, 1987, his uncles, Gorman L. Lights came back as authorities remained confused

Hunt begins for cause of huge South American blackout

By LUIS ANDRES HENAO and PAUL BYRNE
Associated Press

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina — The lights were back on Monday across Argentina, Uruguay and Paraguay after a huge blackout that affected tens of millions people, but authorities remained in the dark about the cause of the grid collapse and continued to calculate the economic damage.

Argentine President Mauricio Macri promised a thorough investigation into what he called an "unprecedented" outage, one that raised questions about flaws in South America's power grid, which connects many of the region's largest countries.

Energy officials said the results of the investigation would be available in 10 to 15 days, and they could not immediately provide details on the economic impact of the outage, which happened on a Sunday, a day before a national holiday in Argentina.

"From zero to 10, there is zero chance that this will repeat itself. It can't repeat itself," Argentine Energy Secretary Gustavo Lopetegui said Monday.

The blackout originated at an electricity transmission point between the power stations at Argentina's Yacyretá dam and Salto Grande in the country's northeast "when the system was getting too much power" Lopetegui said. Although these types of failures have happened in other countries as well, he said a chain of events took place that caused a total disruption.

"This is an extraordinary event that should have never happened," he said. "It's very serious. We can't leave the whole country all of a sudden without electricity." He did not discount the possibility of a cyberattack but said it was unlikely.

The collapse began at about 7 a.m. Sunday, with Argentina's population of 44 million and residents of neighboring Uruguay and some parts of Paraguay waking up to Father's Day in the dark.

Public transportation halted in Buenos Aires, while phone and internet communications were disrupted, water supplies were cut off and shops were forced to close. Patients dependent on home medical equipment were urged to go to hospitals with generators.

Power was restored by Sunday night. But the outage ignited questions about the vulnerability of Argentina's power system at a time when the country is going through a deep economic crisis with soaring inflation, a tumbling of the currency and a spike in utility bills fueled by Macri's decision to cut subsidies as part of his austerity measures.

The conservative leader has seen his popularity ratings plunge during the crisis. Argentines have demonstrated against the rise in utility bills, and the blackout could trigger more such protests against Macri's government just as he seeks re-election in October.

"The country is already in a weird moment and then you wake up and can't see anything," said Julieta Dodda, 27, a saleswoman at a clothing store in downtown Buenos Aires. "Many people were going to meet for lunch to celebrate the day. I saw many online who joked: 'Happy Father's Day from Edesur and Edenor, which are our electricity companies.'"

Energy officials defended the Argentine power system as "robust." But the grid had been known for being in a state of disrepair, with substations and cables that were insufficiently upgraded as power rates remained largely frozen for years.

Outages were once more common, especially during Argentina warm summer months, but had been reduced after Macri came to power in 2015 promising to reinvest in the grid and end what he called the failed energy policy of his predecessors.

After Sunday's embarrassing outage, his rivals jumped at the chance to criticize the conservative leader.

"Millions of people who have had to pay astronomical rates for electricity to benefit those in power are still waiting for the energy to return to their homes," Alberto Fernandez, a center-left presidential candidate who is seen as Macri's top rival, said on Twitter. "Just days ago, they were boasting about 'exporting energy.'" He added a recent tweet from Macri in which the president said: "From darkness to exporting energy."

An Argentine independent energy expert said that systemic operational and design errors played a role in the grid's collapse.

"A localized failure like the one that occurred should be isolated by the same system," said Raúl Bertero, president of the Center for the Study of Energy Regulatory Activity in Argentina. "The problem is known, and technology and studies (exist) to avoid it."

Although Brazil was spared this time, a similar outage in the region's largest country left more than 60 million in the dark in 2009, just as authorities scrambled to boost confidence in its infrastructure before soccer's 2014 World Cup and the 2016 Olympics.

Three months ago, crisis-torn Venezuela suffered its worst power outage, with the lack of electricity endangering hospital patients.

Other parts of the world have also been hit by major outages. Bertero said that about 50 million people were affected by a blackout in the U.S. and some provinces in Canada in 2003, and about as many were hit by another in Italy that same year.

Argentina has had a history of blackouts, but none like Sunday's failure. Only the southern archipelago of Tierra del Fuego was unaffected because it is not connected to the main grid.

Uruguay's energy company UTE said all of Uruguay lost power for hours, and it blamed a "flaw in the Argentine network."

In Paraguay, power in rural communities in the south, near the border with Argentina and Uruguay, was also cut. Authorities said service was restored by afternoon by redirecting energy from the Itaipu hydroelectric plant the country shares with neighboring Brazil.

Many residents of Argentina and Uruguay took to social media to post pictures of their cities in the dark. Others blamed the electricity companies or the government or simply lamented that their plans had been disrupted.

Several Argentine provinces had elections for governor on Sunday, which proceeded with voters using their phone screens and built-in flashlights to illuminate their ballots.

"I don't remember anything like this in Uruguay," said Valentina Giménez, a resident of the capital, Montevideo. "What is really striking about this is that no one understands well what really happened."

Trade war could affect American businesses

U.S. companies' message: Don't expand China tariffs

By PAUL WISEMAN
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — What happens if President Donald Trump carries out his threat to impose tariffs on the remaining $300 billion in Chinese goods that he hasn't already hit with 25 percent import taxes?

A New Hampshire fireworks company says it would have to raise prices, likely lose business and force some small towns to cancel their Fourth of July fireworks displays.

A Minnesota motorcycle maker warns that it would lose business to foreign rivals that don't have to pay taxes on Chinese parts.

A Los Angeles designer and distributor of houseware goods says it would have to extend a hiring freeze and delay plans to expand into a larger warehouse.

The administration, in the midst of the trade war it began with Beijing, had asked for comments on its plan to extend 25% tariffs to everything China ships to the United States.

It's getting an earful. Hundreds of businesses, trade groups and individuals have written to complain that the additional import taxes would drive up prices for consumers, squeeze profits and leave U.S. companies at a competitive disadvantage to foreign rivals that aren't subject to higher taxes on the vital components they buy from China.

They're pleading with the administration to rethink the tariffs — or at least spare the particular imports they and their customers rely on. Some will appear in person to air their grievances in seven days of hearings in Washington that begin Monday.

A common theme in their pleas is that American businesses — not China, as Trump often asserts — must pay the import taxes the president is imposing on Chinese goods. And in the end, many of these companies will pass their higher costs on to their customers.

Trump has already imposed 25 percent tariffs on $250 billion in Chinese imports. The goal is to pressure Beijing to stop stealing American technology, forcing U.S. businesses to hand over trade secrets and unfairly subsidizing Chinese tech companies.

Eleven rounds of negotiations have failed to resolve the dispute over China's aggressive drive to surpass America's technological dominance. Businesses and investors say they hope the negotiations will gain momentum if Trump and President Xi Jinping hold a face-to-face meeting at a Group of 20 summit in Osaka, Japan in two weeks.

"Most businesses are almost praying for a solution," said Patrik Berglund, who tracks global trade as the CEO of Xeneta, an Oslo, Norway ,firm that provides data on the shipping industry. "These things will have enormous consequences. We're so connected in this global world."

Trump's earlier tariffs largely spared American consumers by focusing on industrial goods that don't show up directly in the mall or big-box stores. But the new round will inflict financial pain on ordinary households because it will affect many consumer goods, from cellphones and computers to shoes and silk scarves.

"We're talking about things that you and I buy and buy in a store, and that's going to be felt directly by consumers," said Neil Bradley, chief policy officer at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. The companies that serve the retail market, he said, tend to have "much, much less margin to absorb those increased tariff costs."

A report commissioned by the National Retail Federation found that American consumers would pay an additional $4.4 billion a year for clothing, $2.5 billion more for shoes and $1.6 billion more for household appliances.

More broadly, economists say the tariffs could weaken a U.S. economy that appears to be on shakier footing. Mark Zandi, chief economist at Moody's Analytics, said the higher import taxes would leave the United States with 900,000 fewer jobs than it would have had otherwise.

"The U.S. economy will be flirting with recession later this year and early next," Zandi said.

Jeffrey Pratt, leader of the supply chain practice at the accounting and consulting firm BDO, called the looming tariffs "a bit of gamechanger" for his clients. Many can't afford to absorb the taxes themselves and would pass along the higher costs to their customers.

Atlas PyroVision Entertainment in Jaffrey, New Hampshire, relies on China for 90 percent of the fireworks it sells.

"Simply imposing a 25 percent tariff will ultimately cause significant harm to our family business," CEO Stephen Pelkey said in a filing with the U.S. Trade Representative. "We would be forced to pass along the increase directly to our customers."

Noting that community nonprofits often use the fireworks for Independence Day celebrations, Pelkey wrote: "In most cases, a 25 percent hike in price will force their skies to go dark on the 4th of July."

Bracing for the new tariffs, Yedi Houseware, a Los Angeles family business, has postponed plans to hire and move into a bigger warehouse. Bobby Djavaheri, a company executive, echoed a common complaint: The administration is taxing products — in his case, things like air fryers — that aren't made by American companies. They must be imported. So no U.S. producer benefits from the tariffs; U.S. importers just get socked with a tax.

"It's really dumbfounding," he said.

Indian Motorcycle Co. in Medina, Minnesota, complained that its foreign competitors won't have to pay a tax on Chinese parts, allowing them to "import the finished motorcycle into the United States — without increased costs."

Excluding motorcycle parts from the tariffs, a company lawyer, Paul Vitrano, wrote, would "avoid the unintended consequence of providing foreign-based motorcycle manufacturers with a competitive advantage."

Carltons Men's and Women's Apparel store in the Delaware beach town of Rehoboth says the tariffs would force it to raise prices — a $500 suit could cost $625 — and lose business and cut its staff of 15.

"If revenue declines, then payroll must, too," said owner Trey Kraus.

Objections to the tariffs aren't unanimous. The Bohning Co., a maker of archery equipment in Lake City, Michigan, asserted that Chinese companies are counterfeiting its products and have easier access to the U.S. market than it has to China's.

"The 25 percent tariffs should be put in place," wrote CEO Larry Griffith.

But most of those who sounded off on the tariffs were implacably opposed to them — and concerned.

"We beg, plead and pray you will use common sense in these trade practices and consider the little guy!!" wrote Alan Chadwick, who imports silk scarves from China and sells them in Wyoming. "We are just ants who get trampled under fighting buffalo."

Iran soon to reach limit set by deal

Iran speeds up uranium enrichment as tensions mount

By NASSER KARIMI and JON GAMBRELL
Associated Press

TEHRAN, Iran — Iran will surpass the uranium-stockpile limit set by its nuclear deal in the next 10 days, an official said Monday, raising pressure on Europeans trying to save the accord a year after the U.S. withdrawal lit the fuse for the heightened tensions now between Tehran and Washington.

The announcement by Iran's nuclear agency marked yet another deadline set by Tehran. President Hassan Rouhani already has warned Europe that a new deal needs to be in place by July 7 or the Islamic Republic would increase its enrichment of uranium.

Atomic energy spokesman Behrouz Kamalvandi suggested that Iran's enrichment could reach up to 20 percent, just a step away from weapons-grade levels.

It appears as if Iran has begun its own maximum pressure campaign on the world after facing one from President Donald Trump's administration that deeply cut into its sale of crude oil abroad and sent its economy into freefall. Europe has so far been unable to offer Iran a way around the U.S. sanctions.

The development follows apparent attacks last week in the Strait of Hormuz on oil tankers, assaults that Washington has blamed on Iran. While Iran has denied being involved, it laid mines in the 1980s targeting oil tankers around the narrow mouth of the Persian Gulf through which a fifth of the world's crude oil passes.

"If this condition continues, there will be no deal" anymore, Kamalvandi said. He accused the Europeans of "killing time" as the clock runs down.

Rouhani, greeting France's new ambassador to Tehran on Monday, similarly warned that time was running out on the deal.

"The current situation is very critical and France and the other parties to the (deal) still have a very limited opportunity to play their historic role for saving the deal," Rouhani said, according to his website.

The announcement appeared timed to strike just as European foreign ministers met in Luxembourg. Federica Mogherini, the European Union's top diplomat, declined to specifically address the Iranian announcement.

"At the moment, as of today, Iran is still technically compliant and we strongly hope, encourage and expect that Iran continues to comply," Mogherini told journalists. She insisted she would await the next report on the issue from the U.N.'s nuclear watchdog, the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Under terms of the 2015 nuclear deal with world powers, Iran can keep a stockpile of no more than 300 kilograms (660 pounds) of low-enriched uranium. Kamalvandi said that given Iran's recent decision to quadruple its production of low-enriched uranium, it would pass the 300-kilogram limit on Thursday, June 27.

The Vienna-based IAEA said last month that Iran remained within its stockpile limits and declined to comment on Iran's announcement. Kamalvandi said Iran would continue to allow the U.N. to inspect its nuclear facilities for the time being.

He also raised the specter of increasing its enrichment levels, saying Iran needs 5 percent enriched uranium for its nuclear power plant in southern Iranian port of Bushehr and 20 percent enriched fuel for its Tehran research reactor.

The nuclear deal limits Iran to enriching uranium only to 3.67 percent, enough for power plants and other peaceful purposes.

But after America pulled out of the nuclear accord and escalated sanctions, Rouhani set a July 7 deadline for Europe to come up with better terms for the deal or Tehran would boost enrichment further. So far, a European mechanism called INSTEX to protect trade with Iran has yet to take off.

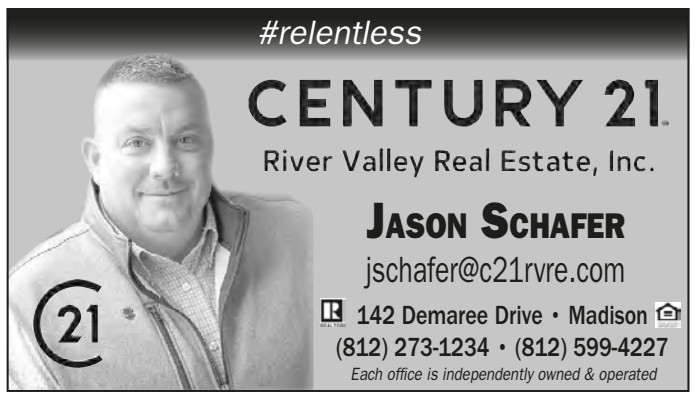
The danger, nuclear nonproliferation experts warn, is that at 20 percent enrichment, only a fraction of atoms need to be removed to enrich up to weapons-grade levels of 90 percent.

Iran maintains its nuclear program is for peaceful purposes, but the 2015 deal grew out of Western concerns about the program.

Under the accord, Iran agreed to limit its uranium enrichment in exchange for the lifting of economic sanctions.

Since Trump took office, the U.S. has steadily stripped away at the accord, and he pulled America out of the deal in May 2018.

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said the international community should reinstate sanctions if Iran follows through on its threats, adding: "In any case, Israel will not allow Iran to obtain nuclear weapons."



More than 100 give Saturday to clean up the riverfront

Dan Holzinger and his daughter, Laurin Holzinger, did not plan on attending this year's River Sweep, and instead, were just "out for a walk" when it started. However, the two decided to jump in, but kept to the north side of Vaughn Drive and spent the majority of their time picking up cigarette butts, paper, and miscellaneous trash. Laurin and her father are both environmental advocates. Laurin graduated with a degree in biology from Franklin College where she once took a field trip to Louisiana to tag ducks and study the bayous. Dan Holzinger once worked in an environmental area at Indiana-Kentucky Electric. Participants this year found an array of litter, including everything from glass, a boat cap, batteries, fishing line and sinkers to a whole "JayC" shopping cart trapped in the banks. More than a hundred Madisonians took to the Vaughn Drive shoreline Saturday morning to take part in the annual River Sweep, while the event's 30-year volunteer coordinator enjoyed her final year leading and organizing the effort that clears waste along the riverfront and spreads environmental awareness.

"We had an incredible amount of people," River Sweep coordinator Stephanie Hellmann said in a Sunday interview with The Madison Courier. "It was phenomenal. When we started out — each year there's a different turnout — people were coming up from the river banks to do the sidewalks and the north side of Vaughn getting cigarette butts. We didn't just do the riverbank, we did all of Vaughn. We had more and more people and less and less trash."

Hellmann started coordinating the event in 1989 when The Ohio River Valley Water Sanitary Commission contacted a Courier-area factory — Hellmann said she believed it was Madison Chemical — to offer the position for coordinating the annual River Sweep. This was before the state had begun to mandate recycling. Hellmann, an longtime environmental advocate, had already jumpstarted projects in the area. The factory then contacted Hellmann.

"They called me and said, 'you should do this,'" Hellmann said.

Ever since, Hellmann has led the initiative. She said the work that goes into coordinating the event is "not a lot — you just have to get all the supplies from ORSANCO ahead of time, what kind of shirts, what kind of bags, then you have to publicize it, get the snacks, and get it all set up by 8 o'clock, then you have to clean up and submit a report to ORSANCO to outline the turnout and the state of the river."

"I think 30 years is enough," Hellmann said. "It's time for someone else to pick it up. I've always done it working with other groups. When we first started, the Jaycee's (Junior Chamber of Commerce) helped. They helped pick up trash as we went along. It's always been groups of Boy Scouts and church groups and homeschool groups. It's always been nice to see these groups come out and make a group effort."

This year more than one hundred volunteers showed up to join in the cause, including some individuals who didn't plan to go or who weren't aware it was happening. Nearing the end of the event, trash bags lined Vaughn Drive, filled with plastic and metal scraps, cigarette butts, miscellaneous stuff junk and even a grocery cart.

"The most wonderful part of it is to get people down there and to get people to see what is there," Hellmann said. "When you drive by it looks great, but when you actually get down there you think 'holy cow, look what I've found.' It creates awareness and keeps it from coming back. If you're along the river and have to go pick something up, it's less likely you're going to throw it there in the future. It's my hope this awareness is revived each year."

Hellmann said she hopes the event continues as a total volunteer effort, adding, "I want it to always be a volunteer thing, because people want it done," not because they have to do it.

"It's time to give somebody else a turn. As far as I know, there will not be any changes in the future," she said. "What I will do is I will suggest names, one person in particular I think will be willing to take it."

Hellmann said she looks forward to being able to spend more time with family this time of year, but that she also does not plan to step away entirely.

"I want to be able to go do things with my family in June, and that's another thing," Hellmann added. "But someone else needs to have a turn, and I'm willing to help, but someone else should get the chance."

The annual river bank clean-up extends the length of the Ohio River, which involves 981 miles, six states and 72 counties. Jefferson County has participated in the sweep since 1989.

Litter in waterways is a global problem and the Ohio River Sweep connects people to the Ohio River while encouraging stewardship of this important resource. This event is family-friendly and children can help clean as well.

Each year, nearly 22,000 volunteers participate in the River Sweep and litter is removed from more than 3,000 miles of shoreline. Over the years in Jefferson County, volunteers have removed furniture, carpeting and tires as well as litter.

the EMS director in Switzerland County as well as across the Ohio River in Carroll and Trimble counties.

Thomas Moore, EMS director for Switzerland County, said all roads remained passable during the storm and that reports of a possible tornado on SR 56 above Vevay proved to be straight line wind damage.

"We had some flash flooding but nothing serious," Moore said.

"Most of it went to the north of us," said Carroll County EMS Director Ed Webb. "We were very fortunate in what rain we did have was spread out over the weekend."

However, weather officials confirmed that at least six tornadoes struck central Indiana over the weekend as part of the storms.

The National Weather Service released details of two new tornadoes from Saturday's outbreak and said more storm damage surveys were planned Monday in Indiana. Elsewhere, severe weather kept Brown County emergency services personnel busy Sunday night where flash flood water entered a residence off Upper Schooner Road and forced Indiana Conservation Officers and Nashville Fire Department to rescue a family of four, including one juvenile, from the home.

Floodwater covering sections of SR 46 West also caused Indiana Conservation Officers and deputies from the Brown County Sheriff's Department to close the road for a short time to prevent any further water emergencies.

Inclement weather also forced the rescheduling of what's believed to be the first gay pride festival in Richmond, Indiana. Rainbow Richmond, the group organizing the festival, announced the event for Saturday was canceled but will be rescheduled.

Midwestern floods hurting fishermen

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — This is a bad year for people who make their living from seafood in Louisiana and Mississippi. Floods from the Midwest are killing oysters, and driving crabs, shrimp and finfish out of bays and marshes, into saltier water where they can survive.

"On a scale of 1 to 10, we are 9-and-a-half destroyed," said Brad Robin, whose family controls about 10,000 acres of oyster leases in Louisiana.

"The light at the end of the tunnel right now is about out," he said.

Many species that depend on a brackish mix of fresh and saltwater in coastal estuaries are decamping as this year's huge floods flush in fresh water, laden with pollution from farms and cities in the Mississippi River basin.

Mississippi Gov. Phil Bryant asked the federal government on May 31 for a fisheries disaster declaration to make federal grants, loans and other aid available to affected people. Gov. John Bel Edwards has prepared to follow suit, asking for details to support a request for Louisiana.

The situation is grim: Louisiana's oyster harvest is 80 percent below average for this time of year and more oysters are expected to die as temperatures rise, according to a preliminary report on the department's website. Shrimp landings were down 63 percent and blue crab landings down 45 percent in April from the five-year average. There's been a drop in the fish catch, but it hasn't reached the statewide average of 35 percent needed for a federal fisheries disaster declaration, the report says.

"We've been dealing with the river since October," said Acy J. Cooper Jr., president of the Louisiana Shrimp Association "That's a long time it's been high."

The die-offs are as bad in Mississippi. Joe Spraggins, executive director of the Mississippi Department of Marine Resources, said fresh water has killed 80 percent or more of the state's oysters. He said crabs are down about 40 percent and brown shrimp landings are down more than 70 percent from a five-year average.

Marine animals require certain amounts of salt in their water. Oysters can tolerate a range of salinity, but a long spell of fresh water coupled with high temperatures can be lethal. Shrimp, crabs and fish simply swim to saltier areas.

North/South All-Star Games coming to Madison this week

By DAVID CAMPBELL
Courier Staff Writer
dcampbell@madisoncourier.com

The best high school baseball players in the state of Indiana will converge on Madison High School and Hanover College this week as the two schools play host to the annual Indiana High School Baseball Coaches Association North/South All-Star Game Series and the Futures Games.

This year marks the first time that Madison's Gary O'Neal Field has played host to the event and the first time in nearly 30 years that it will be held at a high school. Those two factors alone are enough reason to be excited for the event according to Madison High School baseball coach Tim Armstrong.

"The North-South All-Stars Series Tournament is a showcase event for premier athletes from around the state. It's been on our radar for several years going back to 2003. We would all get together — Mike Modisett, Ryan Mahoney, Joe Jenner, Coach O'Neal and myself — and dream about the possibility," Armstrong said. "We want to share our hometown and love for the game and we understand what a unique opportunity this would be for our community, but we knew we would need help. After visiting with Tawana Thomas, Executive Director of Visit Madison, Inc. and Hanover College to share our idea, we were off to the races pretty quickly."

Madison secured the rights to the event last year and has spent the time since upgrading what is already considered by many to be one of the best — if not the best — high school facility in the southern half of the state.

Along with a new scoreboard, Armstrong and his crew has upgraded the fencing and windscreens as well as spruced up the backstop and the dugouts. New signs will be in place this week.

The All-Star festivities will actually get started at Hanover College, which is serving as a partner with Madison High School on the event. Along with housing the athletes during the weekend, Hanover will also play host to the Futures event which will take place on Wednesday at K.T. Young Field.

Up to 70 current high school players will workout at Hanover on Wednesday morning before being broken off into four different teams. The underclassmen will then play two 6-inning games.

Madison senior Mason Welsh and junior Zach Forner will be among those showcasing themselves in front of college coaches. Southwestern sophomore Zach Cole may also get a chance to participate. The workouts begin at 8 a.m. with games starting at noon.

"We are really proud of Zach and Mason for the work they put in and to have this opportunity and level of recognition can be life-changing for some athletes," Armstrong said. "The events surrounding the North-South All-Star Game attract lots of scouts and may provide future playing opportunities for some of the kids who come to play for the weekend."

The All-Stars themselves show up on Friday for workouts and a home run derby, which is being brought back this year after an absence of several years.

While there will be no local players in the event — Madison's last South All-Star was Derek Fisse in 2005 and Shawe's only All-Star was Jared Tekulve in 2001 — there will be plenty of players with either local ties or have played at O'Neal Field.

Lloyd celebrates return to lineup with two goals to lead US over Chili

By ANNE M. PETERSON
AP Sports Writer

PARIS — Carli Lloyd wasn't thrilled to open the Women's World Cup on the bench for the United States. She accepted the role, but made no secret she wanted to start.

When the call came Sunday, Lloyd made it count with a pair of goals to lead the defending champions to a 3-0 victory over Chile. The win pushed the United States into the round of 16.

Lloyd was the hero of the World Cup in Canada four years ago when she scored three goals in the final against Japan that gave the Americans their third World Cup title. But she was on the bench when the U.S. opened the tournament, even though she scored later as a substitute in the 13-0 victory over Thailand.

"I know that my ability is there, I know this is my best version of me. I've just got to go out there and prove it," she said. "Whether that's coming off the bench and making an impact, whether that's starting and getting the opportunity, which I'm grateful for, I'm just trying to make the most of it. I want to win."

Lloyd became the first player to score in six straight World Cup matches with her goal in the 11th minute.

She added another on a header off a corner in the 35th for her 10th career World Cup goal, which moved her into third on the U.S. list behind Abby Wambach (14) and Michelle Akers (12). At 36, she became the oldest player to have a multi-goal game in the tournament.

She nearly got another hat trick — which would have made her the first player with two in the World Cup — but her penalty kick in the 81st minute went wide left.

"It's haunting me right now," Lloyd said. "Wasn't good enough."

The score could have been worse for Chile without unshakable goalkeeper Christiane Endler, who finished with six saves and fended off a flurry of U.S. shots in the second half.

Endler was named player of the match.

"I love the balls coming towards me and being able to showcase my skills," she said through a translator. "Obviously it's difficult to maintain concentration. I think in the first half it was difficult for me to get into the game. I think the second half went better for me and in general for the team."

The victory over Chile was more subdued than the U.S. team's record-breaking rout of Thailand. The Americans celebrated every goal even after the win was well in hand, and the display offended many who thought the champions should have shown more class. The controversy clouded the run-up to the match against Chile.

Several of the American players reached out to their Thai counterparts following the match. Lloyd exchanged encouraging words and tweets with goalkeeper Sukanya Chor Charoenying, and FIFA posted an interview with Thailand's coach thanking the U.S. players for being professional and playing well.

After such a rout, Jill Ellis made sweeping changes to the starting lineup against Chile, including a new front line with Lloyd, Christen Press and Mallory Pugh. Alex Morgan was moved to the bench along with Megan Rapinoe and Tobin Heath.

Becky Sauerbrunn, who sat out the match against Thailand because of a minor quad injury, returned and anchored a backline that included 20-year-old Tierna Davidson, who was making her World Cup debut. Davidson is the youngest player to start for the United States in a World Cup since Tiffany Roberts against Norway in 1995.

Chile made just one lineup change, starting midfielder Claudia Soto in place of Yanara Aedo.

Chile lost its opener to Sweden 2-0, but Endler was solid in that game, too, keeping the Swedes out of the goal until 83rd minute. The second goal got past the 6-footer in stoppage time.

Julie Ertz scored in the 26th minute with a header off a corner kick from Davidson that Endler got her hands on but couldn't stop. It was Ertz's first World Cup goal and came with her husband Zach Ertz, a tight end for the Philadelphia Eagles, looking on.

Endler denied Lloyd another chance at the hat trick when she tipped the U.S. captain's shot over the net in the 72nd minute.

Sweden also advanced out of Group F with a victory 5-1 victory over Thailand earlier Sunday in Nice. Japan, playing in Group D with England, also went through to the knockout stage because both the United States and Sweden won.

Former Vice President Joe Biden was among the U.S. team's well-wishers before the sold-out game at Parc des Princes stadium. Biden, who is seeking the Democratic nomination for president in 2020, referenced the team's lawsuit against U.S. Soccer alleging gender discrimination and seeking equitable pay.

"As we cheer them on in the World Cup, we must support their fight off the field for equal pay. In 2019, it's past time we close the pay gap and ensure women get paid as much as men," Biden tweeted.

U.S. soccer maintains the two teams have different pay structures because of separate collective bargaining agreements.

But for now, the players are concentrating on France and bringing home a fourth World Cup championship.

The United States plays Sweden on Thursday to wrap up the group stage. It is the first meeting between the two teams since Sweden ousted the Americans from the quarterfinals at the 2016 Olympics.

Chile wraps up the group with a match against Thailand on Thursday.

Martin hits 2 HRs lead to Vanderbilt over Louisville

By ERIC OLSON
AP Sports Writer

OMAHA, Neb. — Austin Martin is best known as Vanderbilt's .400 hitter. He's starting to get a reputation for his power.

Martin homered on Reid Detmers' first pitch of the game and he went deep again in the seventh to break a tie in the Commodores' 3-1 victory over Louisville on Sunday in the College World Series.

The sophomore homered twice for the second straight game. Before he hit two against Duke on June 9, he had a total of seven in 115 career games.

"I don't try to think about it too much," Martin said. "I try to separate every at-bat into a different A-B. At the end of the day, you just don't try to do too much when you're at the plate. The results will happen."

Those results were the difference. He became the first player since Florida's Harrison Bader in 2015 to lead off a CWS game with a homer when he drove Detmers' initial offering out to left. Martin's two-run homer off Bryan Hoeing (3-4) in the seventh barely cleared the wall in left center, but it was long enough to break a 1-all tie.

No. 2 national seed Vanderbilt (55-11) set a program record for wins and improved to 4-0 in its CWS openers.

"I think it's the toughest one all teams have to play. To start off in this environment, we've done it four times, but it's not easy," Vandy coach Tim Corbin said. "I told them when they got through that game, that might be the most difficult game they play, regardless of what happens after this. But it's real. There's an adrenaline rush."

Martin, who raised his batting average to .411 after going 4 for 7 his last two games, admitted to feeling jittery when he went to the plate in the first. Detmers gave him a perfect pitch to drive.

"Austin in that moment right there, his ability just to center on the baseball, not understanding the rhythm of the pitch and the speed, that's a clutch moment," Corbin said. "Those are different people that do those things. That's not common."

Vandy starter Drake Fellows (13-1), a sixth-round draft pick of the San Diego Padres this month and the national wins leader, bounced back from a rough outing in an 18-5 loss to Duke in the super regional opener June 7.

No. 7 Louisville (49-17) had base runners in six of Fellows' seven innings but found a semblance of rhythm only in the fifth. No. 8 batter Justin Lavey started things with a double and scored on Henry Davis' base hit to tie it. Lucas Dunn and Logan Wyatt followed with singles to load the bases with one out, but Fellows got the Cards' 3- and 4-hole batters to fly out and ground out to snuff the threat.

"That was definitely the turning point in the game where we missed out on an opportunity," Davis said, "but I still felt like we could win. I think everybody still felt like we could win after that point. Everybody seemed like they were seeing the ball, getting good swings, putting good at-bats together."

Fellows allowed six singles and a double, walked one and struck out six before the bullpen took over. All-SEC closer Tyler Brown worked the ninth for his 15th save.

Detmers labored through the first three innings and he left with two outs in the sixth. Vanderbilt managed only one hit off the sophomore left-hander after Martin's homer and JJ Bleday's single in the first, but the ACC pitcher of the year walked a career-high six during his 102-pitch afternoon.

"I mean, you've just got to work through it," Detmers said. "I kind of struggled finding the zone early on, and you've just got to go out there and compete and give it your best."

Vanderbilt caught a break in the sixth when Louisville's Lavey popped up in the grass behind first base. Running with two outs, Danny Oriente came around from second. Infante, the Commodores' first baseman, couldn't make the catch, but the ball had floated just foul, and the call was upheld on a video review.

Lavey ended up striking out, and the Cardinals had only three other batters reach base the rest of the way. They were just 3 for 16 with runners on base.

ALL OR NOTHING

Vanderbilt has allowed a total of 11 runs in six wins in the NCAA Tournament. The Commodores gave up 18 in their one loss, the Duke debacle.

HARD-LUCK CARDS

Louisville is just 2-9 in five CWS appearances, fifth worst among teams that have been to Omaha at least three times, and the Cardinals have scored just 22 runs in their last nine games here.

UP NEXT

Vanderbilt will play a Bracket 2 winners' game Tuesday night against Mississippi State, a 5-4 winner over Auburn.

Louisville plays an elimination game Tuesday against Auburn.

Woodland's 3 shots get him a US Open Championship

By EDDIE PELLS
AP National Writer

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. — Very soon, Gary Woodland will be a father of three, and odds are he'll answer the same way about the kids as he will about the three shots that cemented him in as a U.S. Open champion.

Which is his favorite? They're all perfect in their own, special way.

Woodland's Father's Day at Pebble Beach included a flushed 3-wood that set up birdie to give him a two-shot cushion, a wedge clipped off the 17th green that helped him preserve it, then a 30-foot birdie putt on No. 18 that ended the tournament with a flourish — and put him in the record book, to boot.

"My whole life, I've been able to compete and win at everything I've done," he said. "It's taken a while, but it's trending in the right direction."

Straight past Tiger Woods in the record book, in fact.

Woodland, whose wife, Gabby, is expecting twins in a couple of months to join their soon-to-be-2-year-old son, Jaxson, got to 13-under-par 271 with that closing birdie, beating by one the record Woods set for a U.S. Open at Pebble Beach during his 15-shot romp to victory in 2000.

Pebble Beach played tougher that year.

But to say Woodland took the easy way to his first major title would be missing the point.

He spent the entire day holding off Brooks Koepka, who himself was shooting for history — trying to become the first player since 1905 to complete a U.S. Open three-peat.

Koepka made clear early that he was up for the challenge. He opened with four birdies over the first five holes to pull within a shot of Woodland, who was playing one hole behind.

"I thought, 'Yeah, we've got a ballgame now,'" Koepka said.

They did, except it wasn't a back-and-forth ballgame. Woodland never surrendered the lead.

It was at one shot when Woodland drove to the middle of the fairway on the par-5 14th, faced with the choice between laying up, the way most players have all week, or going for it and hoping the shot would hold on the severely sloping putting surface.

"We sat there and thought about it for a while and said 'Let's go, we're out here to win,'" Woodland said.

The ball just cleared the bunker fronting the green, took two hops and rolled toward the collar left of the pin. A chip and a putt later, Woodland had a birdie and a two-shot lead.

"The 3-wood on 14 was what gave me the confidence to even execute the shot on 17," he said.

That shot, made while still clinging to the two-shot lead, added to Tom Watson's chip-in from the sand in 1982 and Jack Nicklaus' 1-iron off the flag 10 years before that on the growing list of history-making moments on that storied 17th green.

With his ball on the front right edge of the putting surface, but with a small hill blocking his path to the hole, Woodland took out his wedge and made pure contact, sending the ball over the hump then back onto the green, where it checked up and ran out to tap-in range for par.

"When I started to transition into golf, the short game was what was really bad, to be honest," Woodland said. "And so my whole deal was, I had to hit chips off putting greens all the time, and there were some times where superintendents weren't a huge fan of me."

He's not bad with the putter on those greens, either.

After Koepka's birdie putt on No. 18 slid just past to close his tournament at 10 under, Woodland carried a two-shot lead onto the 18th green and only needed to get down in three from 30 feet to secure the trophy.

He got down in one instead, raised his hands to the heavens then finished with a huge fist pump.

Not bad for a guy who thought basketball would be his best sport, but gave it up after a year of playing in college so he could get serious about golf.

"The question about if I ever dreamed of making the putt on the last hole of a U.S. Open when I was a kid, no, I didn't," Woodland said. "But I hit a lot of game-winning shots on the basketball court when I was a kid."

Koepka said he wasn't upset about this weekend.

He became the fourth player — joining Lee Trevino, Lee Janzen and Rory McIlroy — to break 70 in all four rounds of the U.S. Open, but the first to not walk away with the trophy. The main reason: Minutes after Koepka finished, Woodland became the fifth player to break 70 in all four rounds.

When it was over, Woodland shared a long hug with his father, Dan, who coached him hard in every sport he played except for golf when he was growing up — made him work for his wins, made him earn everything he got.

Father's Day. A U.S. Open title. What's not to love?

"I wouldn't be where I am today without my dad and the way he treated me and the way he was hard on me," Woodland said. "And that's something that I look forward to doing with my son."

Encarnacion in, Frazier out in NY; Braves keep on rolling

NEW YORK (AP) — Edwin Encarnación will find himself in a familiar spot after he joins the Yankees in the Bronx. Manager Aaron Boone plans to use the AL home run leader as his team's primary designated hitter once the 36-year-old slugger arrives. The AL East leaders acquired Encarnación for a minor league pitcher in a late-night trade Saturday with Seattle. Boone said he expects Encarnación to be available when the Yankees open a three-game series against the Tampa Bay Rays.

To make space for the veteran slugger, young outfielder Clint Frazier was optioned to Triple-A, even though he was batting .283 with 11 homers and an .843 OPS. New York is brimming with big bats but could use another starting pitcher, and Frazier could be an enticing piece to dangle on the trade market.

ALL TOGETHER NOW

The Braves have won 9 of 10, including 2 of 3 against Philadelphia over the weekend, and they will try to stretch their 2 1/2-game NL East lead in a series against the Mets. Atlanta drubbed the Phillies 15-1 Sunday, a game that left manager Brian Snitker concluding "We're pulling it all together." Breakout ace Mike Soroka (7-1, 1.92) will face New York's Zack Wheeler (5-4, 4.87).

BIG BIRD

Cardinals shortstop Paul DeJong has homered in three of his past four games, a roll he'll ride into a four-game home series against the Marlins. DeJong picked on the Mets all weekend, capping his outburst with a tiebreaking homer in the eighth inning Sunday. After opening the season as St. Louis' three-hitter, DeJong was bumped recently to the two-spot, one place ahead of Paul Goldschmidt. He's homered five times in 15 games since manager Mike Shildt made the change.

BACK TO IT

Cleveland right-hander Mike Clevinger is set to return from the injured list to start against Texas. Clevinger strained a muscle in his upper back April 7 during his second start of the season, interrupting a sensational beginning to his year that included 22 strikeouts and two hits over 12 shutout innings. He'll oppose right-hander Lance Lynn (7-4, 4.40) in Arlington.

All-Star — Jason Maddox and who attended Madison schools earlier in his life. Austin's Drew Buhr, who will attend the University of St. Louis, has squared off against Madison and Southwestern plenty of times in his career, including a legendary outing in the sectional championship this year where he and Southwestern's Bailey Elliot dueled for 10 innings before each had to exit the game.

Jeffersonville's Blayden McMahel can only hope to equal his last trip to O'Neal Field when he hit two home runs and went 5-for-5 with 10 RBIs in early May. South Dearborn's Ethan Getz, Lawrenceburg's Austin Weimer, Columbus East's Julian Greenwell, Batesville's Lane Oesterling and Silver Creek's Tyler Kapust have each played on the field in their high school careers. All of those players will be coached by Jac-Cen-Del's David Bradshaw.

Nearly every player on both the North and South rosters has committed to play college baseball with 18 going to Division I schools. Two of the players have signed with current College World Series participant Louisville, including Southport's Avery Short, who was drafted in the 12th round by the Arizona Diamondbacks last week, the only Major League Baseball draftee among the group.

Players will begin checking in at Madison High School on Friday at 10:30 a.m. with a Home Run Derby scheduled for 3:15 p.m. An banquet will then be held at the Brown Campus Center at Hanover College starting at 7 p.m. where Indiana head coach Jeff Mercer will be the keynote speaker.

There will be two games on Saturday with the first beginning at noon and the second at 3:45 p.m. The teams will then be shuttled to Bicentennial Park at 6:30 p.m. for a party. All events are open to the public.

The All-Star Series will then conclude with a final game that begins at noon on Sunday. This last game will be a wooden-bat game.

Daunte O'Banion places 48th

COURIER STAFF REPORT
sports@madisoncourier.com

Madison's Daunte O'Banion placed 48th at the New Balance Outdoor Nationals Track & Field event in Greensboro, North Carolina on Saturday.

O'Banion, who recently graduated from Madison High School, qualified for the Emerging Elite event, designated for the top schoolboy runners in the nation.

O'Banion did not run his best, finishing in just 51.70 which is nearly two seconds slower than his own school record set late last month.

Ryan Willie of Maryland won the race in 47.32 while Mange Camara of Massachusetts was second in 47.73. Jahn Riley of Indianapolis Pike, who won the state championship, placed sixth overall in 48.17.

The meet was just one of several for O'Banion during a busy summer as he prepares for college. He will run for Indiana Tech starting in the fall.

Padres, Rockies score record 92 runs in four-game series

By PAT GRAHAM
AP Sports Writer

DENVER — In a historically high-scoring series, the outcome was decided by a pinch-hitting pitcher.

On a bases-loaded walk, no less, off a starter who was making his first major league relief appearance.

That seems appropriate for such a wacky series.

The Padres and Rockies set a modern-era record by combining for 92 runs in a four-game series, with San Diego pitcher Matt Strahm drawing a pinch-hit, bases-loaded walk in the ninth inning to rally past Colorado 14-13 Sunday.

"A four-game series here, it feels like a month," first baseman Eric Hosmer said. "This was a grind."

It was just another wild day at Coors Field in this split series where the Rockies outscored the Padres 48-44 while the teams combined for 131 hits. Colorado's Charlie Blackmon became the first player since at least 1900 with 15 hits in a four-game series, according to STATS. Adding to the zaniness: the finale was delayed once to clean up a big puddle in foul territory despite sunny skies, and again later because of weather.

"That's the great thing about baseball — you see things you've never seen before," Rockies infielder Ryan McMahon said. "It didn't bounce our way."

Trailing 13-10 in the ninth, Wil Myers had an RBI single and Greg Garcia promptly tied it with a two-out, two-run triple off closer Wade Davis (1-2). The Rockies brought in starter Jon Gray, who intentionally walked two batters to face Strahm after the Padres used up all their position players. Gray fell behind 3-1 before throwing a strike. Strahm watched a 98-mph fastball narrowly miss for ball four.

"The 3-2 was down and I know I can't handle that with his velocity," Strahm said.

Rockies manager Bud Black said he went with Gray — the starter Thursday — because of his usual ability to throw strikes. Plus, the Rockies had some relievers who weren't available given their work load.

Gerardo Reyes (3-0) earned the win by striking out three in the eighth. Kirby Yates threw a perfect ninth for his 24th save.

Hunter Renfroe homered twice for San Diego, and Fernando Tatis Jr. had three hits, including a double and a triple.

All told, the four games took more than 16 hours to complete.

"I can't really explain some of the things that went on and honestly I'm just happy to get out of here for a split, for sure," Garcia said.

The Padres raced out to a 3-0 lead before a giant puddle suddenly formed along the right field line due to an issue with the irrigation line. The grounds crew rolled the water away as the teams waited in the dugout during the 15-minute holdup.

In the bottom of the inning, Colorado responded with six runs. Blackmon led the way with two hits in the inning, including a solo homer to lead off.

The game was again halted in the sixth as weather moved into the area. The delay lasted 48 minutes.

Once the tarp was lifted, the Rockies quickly went to work by scoring three runs to make it 13-8. Ian Desmond, Ryan McMahon and Raimel Tapia had three straight doubles to start the frame. The trio went a combined 9 for 15 with six RBIs.

Blackmon remained red hot with three more hits. He's reached base safely in all 26 of his home games this season.

"Our whole lineup swung the bat good. Their lineup swung the bat good," Blackmon said. "It was the most offensive series I've ever seen."

WILD WEEKEND

Colorado won the opener 9-6 and the third game 14-8, while San Diego took Friday's game 16-12. The 92 runs were the most in a four-game series since 1900. The all-time record is 112 runs between the Cleveland Blues and St. Louis Browns of the American Association in 1887, per STATS.

DAVIS' MELTDOWN

Davis had his second blown save of the series.

"Wasn't behind the baseball and making good pitches," Davis said. "On a day like today, that's not going to work out. ... Try to wash it as much as you can. It hurts."

SHORT STARTS

Padres lefty Nick Margevicius surrendered nine runs and 11 hits over 1 1/3 innings as his ERA rose from 5.02 to 6.41. He also threw one pitch all the way to the backstop.

Rockies righty Peter Lambert gave up eight runs and nine hits over three innings as his ERA soared from 1.50 to 6.00. He threw two pitches to the backstop. Lambert chipped in on offense with a pair of RBI singles.

UP NEXT

Padres: Open a three-game series against Milwaukee on Monday with lefty Joey Lucchesi (5-4, 4.11 ERA) getting the start.

Rockies: After a day off, the Rockies open a three-game set in Arizona on Tuesday with right-hander Antonio Senzatela (5-5, 5.48) taking the mound.

Thurston tosses 2 1/3 scoreless

COURIER STAFF REPORT
sports@madisoncourier.com

Madison's Ryan Thurston pitched two and a third scoreless innings in the Gary SouthShore RailCats' 8-7 win at home over the St. Paul Saints on Saturday.

Thurston entered the game in the fourth inning with Gary and St. Paul locked in a 0-0 tie. He proceeded to shut the Saints down, allowing just one hit and walking one and left the game after the sixth inning with Gary leading 5-0.

St. Paul scored six runs in the seventh to deny Thurston the win. The RailCats then rallied with three runs in the bottom of the seventh to pull out the victory.

In 12 innings this season in the independent American Association, Thurston is 0-0 with a 1.80 ERA having allowing just three earned runs while striking out 10 and walking six.

Gary SouthShore, who is currently 12-15 on the season and in fifth place in the division, begin a two-game series at Fargo-Moorhead on Tuesday.

NASCAR overturns victory for the first time since 196

NEWTON, Iowa (AP) — NASCAR overturned a victory for the first time under its toughened new policy on cheating when Brett Moffitt was declared the winner of the Truck Series race at Iowa Speedway after Ross Chastain failed a post-race inspection.

Chastain led the final 141 laps of Sunday's 200-lap race, but series managing director Brad Moran said the winning No. 44 was too low when it was measured with NASCAR's height sticks.

"The height sticks have warning yellows in them and reds, and it was right off of all of them, so unfortunately it was extremely low," Moran said.

The disqualification was the first under strict new rules put into place at the start of this season to deter the culture of cheating — and it delivered a much-needed win for Moffitt, a native Iowan racing at his hometown track.

"I think, for the integrity of the sport, it's the right thing to do," said Moffitt, who never led a lap in the race.

"Obviously I came out on the good end of it. If I was in Ross's shoes, I wouldn't be too thrilled about it."

Niece Motorsports tweeted after the race that it will appeal the decision. Team owner Al Niece said in a statement that the truck passed opening and pre-race inspections.

"We believe that the No. 44 truck sustained minor damage, which left the truck too low following the race," Niece said.

NASCAR said the last time it disqualified an apparent race winner was April 17, 1960, when Emanuel Zervakis' victory at Wilson Speedway in North Carolina was thrown out because of an oversized fuel tank. But the last driver to be stripped of a victory was Mike Skinner in a 1999 race at Atlanta Motor Speedway. Skinner led the final 41 laps but NASCAR said the next morning his car had an unapproved cylinder head. The team filed an appeal and Skinner was once again awarded the victory, but did not receive the usual first-place earnings.

Shrewsbury-Windle house

Historic home receives even more awards for restoration

By TRENTON SCROGGINS
Special to the Courier

The Shrewsbury-Windle House celebrated 170 years of American history Friday evening, with guests settling on the home's front lawn in downtown Madison, gazing up and northward at the newly restored and awarded architectural icon.

The historic downtown home, built in 1849, received numerous awards for its recent restoration project, explained John Staicer, president of Historic Madison, Inc., as he opened the night with several announcements related to the awards.

Among these announcements was that a merit award will be presented to Ratio Architects and Historic Madison, Inc., the property owner, by the Indiana chapter of the American Institute of Architects for the home's restoration.

This announcement comes one month after Historic Madison, Inc. was presented the national Preservation Award by The Victorian Society in America as a recognition of the four-year, $2 million comprehensive interior and exterior restoration on the home at 301 West First.

At the time of receiving the Preservation Award, Charles Robertson, chair of the VSA Preservation Committee, said, "We were impressed by the best practices employed during the restoration, including a detailed historic structure report and museum quality restoration standards…We are deeply pleased to confer this honor on such an outstanding historic preservation success in the United States."

Among the other announcements Friday evening was the permanent display of the 2019 Cook Cup Award for Outstanding Restoration of the property, which Historic Madison, Inc. received in March from Indiana Landmarks.

In relation to the Cook Cup Award, Indiana Landmarks in collaboration with Storytelling Arts of Indiana will be producing an original story to be performed based on the Shrewsbury-Windle House. The piece will be performed initially in Indianapolis in February before coming to the home in Madison sometime next spring or summer, according to Staicer.

Alongside this, Historic Madison Inc., announced that a Shrewsbury-Windle House Christmas tree ornament will be available this fall in honor of the property's 170th anniversary, and as part of the city's annual ornament program.

Staicer also discussed Historic Madison Inc.'s campaign to establish a historic home campus in the neighborhood of the Shrewsbury-Windle House, which would include the Talbot-Hyatt House, a home currently being rehabilitated by the group with aims at the property becoming the new offices of Historic Madison Inc. Staicer said the Talbot-Hyatt House will be Historic Madison Inc.'s contribution to the 2019 Candlelight Tour of Homes this fall.

The Shrewsbury-Windle House showcases a famous, three-story spiral staircase that winds its way up through the center hall. The Drawing Room is a Greek Revival interior featuring the1859 paint and varnish on walls, woodwork and elaborate plaster moldings and gas chandeliers that the Shrewsburys installed. There also are 19th century family oil portraits that have always been in the home, original restored Shrewsbury furniture and a new custom carpet replicating one seen in an early photo.

The exterior features two, 12-foot tall entry doors with intricately hand-carved 170 year-old stone-and-wood decorative embellishments, original restored ornate iron fencing and balconies, a brick sidewalk in herringbone pattern, stone curbing and a stone-lined gutter.

The Shrewsbury-Windle House has had just three private owners since 1849. Charles L. and Ellen Shrewsbury and their family owned it until 1917 when it sold at sheriff's sale to Harry Baldwin and Lucy Rogers Walker. The Walker family sold it to John and Ann Windle in 1948. The Windles retired to Madison from Chicago to restore and live in the home, from which they also bought and sold antiques. The home was deeded to Historic Madison in 2011 by Ann Windle's estate. Her wish was to preserve the home as a "historically correct example of architecture for the cultural enrichment of people."

The Shrewsbury-Windle House is the birthplace of the organized historic preservation movement in Madison, Indiana. John and Ann Windle and a committed group of local business people founded Historic Madison there in 1960 at a $100-a-plate dinner.

Since that time, HMI has been recognized nationally for its role in helping establish a nationwide community revitalization program, for a unique industrial history preservation project and its successful effort in 2006 to designate the Madison Historic District as a National Historic Landmark — the largest contiguous Landmark district in the United States.

A rededication of the restored Shrewsbury-Windle House is scheduled for June 23 from 6 p.m. to 9 pm. It will be available for group tours, events, rentals and other special programs after the rededication. For more information, contact Historic Madison, info@historicmadisoninc.com, (812) 265-2967 or www.historicmadisoninc.com.

Historic Madison, Inc. along with amateur historians, business owners, retirees, political candidates, and others, settled on the front lawn of the Shrewsbury-Windle home Friday evening (above) in imitation of the home's first party back in 1949, while the home stood open for viewing. President John Staicer stated that The Madison Courier covered the original event and had returned to cover the anniversary of the inaugural housewarming party, reading off several lines from the past report. The Shrewsbury-Windle House is the birthplace of Historic Madison, Inc. in 1960, where a similar dinner took place at $100-a-plate. (Courier staff photos by Trenton Scroggins)

Music in the Park

Madison Main Street's Music in the Park kicked off the season last Friday at Broadway Fountain with a rousing evening featuring J.D. Shelburne. The free concert began at 5 p.m. with food and music followed at 6 p.m. German American Bank sponsored the event. Future Music in the Park evenings will include Rusty Bladen July 12, The Doctor's Band August 9 and Motherfolk Sept. 13. (Courier staff photos by Mark Campbell)

Salvation Army's summer party

The Salvation Army hosted a Power Up Summer Block Party last week with refreshments, games and much more. The games included human Bingo, where attendees moved around to meet other guests to fill out their Bingo charts. Participants could also play smaller games, like one where Lt. Vinal Lee helped Liliana Reddick (right) shoot down cans with rubber bands. The party also included a small Bible lesson by Lt. Lee, a prayer by Capt. Brenna Lee and much more. Smyrna Homemakers

Thirteen members of Smyrna Homemakers met at Resurrection Lutheran Church May 15. The meeting was opened with the Pledge of Allegiance. All answered roll call with a favorite memory of their mother. Secretary and treasurer reports were given. The club now has a total of 18 members. A scholarship was awarded to a Shawe senior, Devin Russell, from Jefferson County Homemakers, for $800. All members were reminded to keep track of volunteer hours. New officers were elected as follows: President Glenda Schirmer, Vice President Kay Dunham, Secretary Wanda Stewart, Treasurer Jane Wilson, and Health and Safety June Chatham. Members voted to have a refreshment stand June 8 for Stewart. Auction plans were made. The next meeting will be June 19 at Jewells on Main in Warsaw, Kentucky. Members will meet at Resurrection Lutheran Church at 10 a.m. to carpool. Devotions were read and refreshments served.

Sommer Family Reunion

The Gustav and Rosa Sommer Family Reunion will be at 12:30 p.m. on Sunday, June 23 in the Basement of the Knights of Columbus. Attendees can bring table service, drinks and a dish to share.

Educating readers on son's prosopagnosia, remembering

Annie Lane

Dear Annie: I read your column every day and am a faithful fan. Your column reaches a multitude of readers and is a valuable way to enlighten and educate on topics either not talked about or not well known. I wanted to write to you about a condition that my son has, in hopes of educating people about it, as there are many others who have the same condition and are suffering in silence.

My son has prosopagnosia, which is a neurological condition characterized by the inability to recognize the faces of familiar people. Some experts have claimed that 2% of the population has the condition. There are two forms, congenital, which means from birth, or acquired, which means through stroke, traumatic brain injury or certain neurodegenerative diseases. It also tends to run in families. Some degree of prosopagnosia is often present in children with autism and Asperger syndrome, and may be the cause of their impaired social development.

My son has had the condition from birth. We always knew that he had trouble identifying people, as he would frequently mix people up when he was younger, such as his own dad and uncle, who, while having similar height and build, looked nothing alike. We always thought it was a quirk — out of sight, out of mind. However, as he got older and started attending school full-time, we noticed a change in personality; his self-esteem plummeted and he frequently said he felt dumb and out of place.

This was very scary to witness as a parent. Luckily, he had some amazing teachers along the way who identified and recommended that something else was going on and encouraged us to have a neuropsychological evaluation done. He scored in the first percentile for visual memory. At the same time, his dad read about prosopagnosia. It was like a lightbulb went off in our heads when we read about the symptoms, and completed a checklist. Our psychologist was receptive to reviewing and learning about this condition and reached out to colleagues.

After further review, and appointments with a neuro-opthamologist and neurologist, we were able to get a diagnosis. Now there is no foolproof test to diagnose the condition, but our son had enough of the markers for the doctors to make an educated diagnosis. We can't tell you how much having an answer and learning about the condition really helped our son. While it still took some time and therapy, his mood improved, his self-esteem came back, and he was happy to explain his condition to his friends and family to help them understand.

This is something he will struggle with all his life. There are times when he loses his family in a large crowd or can't find his friends on a playground. There are times when he totally ignores a friend because he runs into him unexpectedly and can't identify him, which results in hurt feelings on both sides. Luckily, he has support from his family, friends and community. Many times we have run into people unexpectedly who know about our son's condition, and they smile and introduce themselves to him and give a brief sentence or two on where he may know them from. This goes a long way in helping him to remember.

Thanks for always being there. — A Loving Mom in Massachusetts

Dear Loving Mom: Thank you for educating all of us on what must be a difficult condition, one that your son is dealing with admirably, thanks to the courageous and intelligent efforts of you, your husband, the doctors and those special teachers who really cared about your son. Your story is very inspiring.

JOHN D. SCHURING,
Plaintiff,
vs.
THE UNKNOWN OWNERS OF A PORTION OF
624 & 626 W. THIRD ST. Madison, IN 47250
Defendants.

SUMMONS

TO: The Unknown Owners of 624 & 626 W. Third St., Madison, IN 47250

THE STATE OF INDIANA to the above persons named as Defendants and any other persons who may be concerned.
YOU ARE NOTIFIED that you have been sued in the court above named by the person named as Plaintiff. The nature of the suit is a Complaint to Quiet Title wherein Plaintiff seeks to quiet title to the subject real estate in the name of John D. Schuring by reason of adverse possession by John D. Schuring along with the prior owners of 624 W. Third St., exclusively, continuously, uninterrupted, openly, notoriously for more than 20 years.
The owners of the portion of 624 & 626 W. Third Street, Madison, Indiana are unknown.
You must answer the Complaint to Quiet Title in writing by you or your attorney within thirty (30) days after the last notice of this action is published and if you fail to do so title to subject real estate should be quieted in the name of John D. Schuring.
The name and address of the attorney for Plaintiff is Devon M. Sharpe, of Jenner & Pattison, 508 East Main Street, Madison, Indiana, 47250, Telephone: (812) 265-5132.

WARREN, YOU SHOULDN'T COME TO DAY CARE WHEN YOU HAVE A COLD... YOU'LL GIVE IT TO ALL OF US!
WHY DIDN'T YOUR PARENTS KEEP YOU HOME TODAY?
THEY DIDN'T WANT ME TO GIVE MY COLD TO THEM
AH-CHOO! AH-CHOO! AH-CHOO! AH-CHOO!
LUCKILY WE KEEP THESE MASKS HANDY FOR MARVIN'S DIAPERS

PEPPERMINT PATTY! WHAT ARE YOU DOING HERE?
WORKING ON MY GUILT FEELINGS.. WHERE'S CHUCK? I HAVE TO SEE HIM..
THEY SENT HIM HOME.. THEY SAID HE WAS THE CAUSE OF SOME TROUBLE IN THE GIRLS' CAMP..
I'M THE TROUBLE, LINUS! IT WAS ALL MY FAULT! I FEEL TERRIBLE...
I THINK I'M GETTING SICK... I FEEL SHAKY..
HERE, HOLD THIS FOR AWHILE.. IT'LL CALM YOU DOWN...

BRIDGE

WHAT YOU SEE MIGHT NOT SUFFICE

Jose Marti, a Cuban poet, said, "A grain of poetry suffices to season a century."

When you are a defender, you know how many tricks will suffice to defeat the contract. But sometimes the hard part is finding them.

In today's deal, how should West defend against three spades? He leads the heart ace: four, eight, two.

In the auction, South might well have passed out two spades, but if his partner had had one fewer heart and one more diamond, four spades would probably have been makable. Albeit I concede that it isn't obvious why North would pass out three spades with his actual 3=3=2=5 hand and raise to game with 3=2=3=5, even though we do get extra-nervous with a weak tripleton in an opponent's suit. In addition, if you use Support Doubles, North would double over two hearts to show three spades, reserving a spade raise to guarantee four-card support.

At trick two, West cashes the heart queen, seeing his partner complete an echo (high-low) with his doubleton. Now West can see four winners: three hearts and one spade. But where is trick five? Checking the high-card points makes it clear that East doesn't have anything useful to contribute.

West should see that he can gain a club ruff. At trick three, he shifts to his singleton. South takes that trick and plays a trump, but West wins immediately with the ace and leads his lowest heart. This forces East to ruff, and then it should be the work of a moment for him to return a club for West to ruff.
